Speech of Henry A. Whee at the Opening of the Horticultural Society in Richmond—He Advisor Young Men to Become Parsacra and De Their Own Labor.

Washnorov, Oct. 16, 1867, }
The Horticultural and Pomological Society of Virginia was opened to night in Richmond. General Wise delivered the address. He commenced by saying that "never in the history of nations has revolution been more sudden, shocking and severing in its effects than

After describing the mode in which the Union was formed, he said:—
This common government was so plural in fact that it had no name in the singular number. Its very name is plural of state—the United States—not plural of people in the sense of papulation. There is a hisme man, a New Yorker, a Virginian, a Kentuckiel, a Norib or South Carolinian, but even the great expounder himself was never so immodest as to call himself a United States man. He was a Mareachusetts man, a son of the elder saster of Virginia, which hailed her cheerily in the night of the revolution or rebellion against George the Third, by the grace of God King of Great Britain, when Virginia and Man achusetts were States, in the exercise of the rights of the war, the highest act of sovereignty, before the United States even where.

He then spoke of the manner in which Sargeant S. Frentiss made the two worts "fellow citizens" embrace and express the full grandeur and greatness of our country, and inspire the holy sentiment to preserve, guard, perpetuate and defend it, and said:—
alas! we are no longer reliew citizens, no longer citizens. Our own, our native land, its civil liberty has departed; its governments, State and federal, have been dissolved and changed. There are no longer any guarantees of the rights of the one or checks upon the powers of the other, and its soil has been trampled in mire and filth by the invasion of a fratricidal civil war. Where now internal sovereignty? Where now equal dignity? Where now separate State independence? The wrecks of powers and of rights point to Congress. Congress has stationed commandants over districts numbered by proclamation.

soparate State independence? The wrecks of powers and of rights point to Congress. Congress has stationed commandants over districts numbered by proclamation. They have ordered the civil to be subordinate and obedient to the military authority. The conventional as well as the municipal powers and the process and the state of justice are suspended by spacifications, who drill to order, who substitute criers and tip staffs with drum and fifs, who serve no civil process, but note the minute of the proces vertal and are a med with gloves of sizel to do martial execution. For free white people who were masters but yesteria, are numbed to become the political slaves of the black freedmen of today. The American slaves of yesterday, the freedmen, not freeman, of today, are exalted to become the political black masters of the white freemen of yesterday. What a change in a single day! It was rather, a night of the blackmens of darkness of an another of the state of the state of a change of the change in a change of the frace and civil rights of citizenship. It was a change of black slaves late black masters, a change of the Ethiopian's color and nature into white, nor a change of the Caucasian color and nature gluto black; not a change of the races, but a change reversing the rights and relations of the two races and merging the rights and relations of the two races and merging the rights and relations of the two races and merging the rights and relations of the two races and merging the rights and relations of the two races and merging the rights and relations of the two races and merging the rights and relations of the two races and merging the rights and relations of the two races

IMPORTANT CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS.

(Washington (Oct. 15) Correspondence of the Boston Post.)

Hon, Francis Thomas stated before the Sub-Committee to-day his compis nts against the present State government of Maryland, contending that no State government of Maryland, contending that no State government of Maryland, contending that no State government was republican in form which violated the cardunal principle of apportioning representation according to population. He said the new constitution of Maryland practically placed the government of the State in the hands of a minority of one-third of its people. Another give question, he said, was whether a State government reorganized by the United States can be approxeded by a new form of government created in defance of the provisions of the existing constitution under which said Legislature acts, and which convention is made up on a representative basis unknown to the constitution of a State, is such as can legally act on behalf of the people of a State. Such a body being clearly revolutionary the question remains to be determined, by the authorities of the United States whother the forms of government gluaranced to the people of the states are to be changed according to the terms prescribed therein, by which the United States government, the State government and the people of the State are equally bound, or by revenitionary processes, in total disregard of this terms of a solemn compact. The determination of these important questions will not only affect the validity of the practical distance and admitted by both parties, that Congress mest be mitsfied that the government, and that it has a right to go behind the credentials of Senators and inquire into the whole subject. The obligations of the first article of the United States constitution, known as the "guarantee cleave," its bioding upon every State in the Union, and it is therefore competent for Congress was obligation of the inputs into the present of the subject.
